How faith communities can improve health and well-being

Faith-based communities offer comfort and support for people in times of need. No matter what someone believes in, they're ready to welcome others and lend a hand.

By working with faith-based groups, Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield can help improve the well-being of our members and make healthcare simpler.

We know that:

- Faith leaders who work with their communities can help members find the right support and services.
- Faith-based groups often help first in a crisis. They connect people to food, housing, grief support, and other services, especially in areas where help can be harder to find.
- Faith leaders are trusted voices who can help people learn about preventive care, screenings, and health education.

Anthem has pledged to:

- Work with faith-based groups and faith leaders in the area.
- Support faith leaders in addressing the physical, mental, and spiritual needs of the community.
- Create tools and resources for the faith community.
- Promote partnerships among faith-based groups.
- Educate others with the annual It Is Well: Interfaith Health and Wellness Summit.
